HUNGKONG, JANUARY 28TH, 1868.

THE most important question dealt with it the report of the Postmaster-General for 1883 is the need of more space for the work of Thursday for this port. the Post Office and for an increased staff to do that work. Mr. Lister shows that in twelve years, while the work of the Post Office has nearly doubled-the amount of that port for Manila. correspondence passing through it having quite doubled-the staff is so little larger A description of Chinese Festivals. Fasts, &c., that the total salaries paid in 1887 amount the latter has been postboned. It may possibly to only $22,740 against $20,400 in 1875 The pressure of the work has undoubtedly become much greater by the more frequent arrivals of mails and the more frequent tution of the Parcel Post has added will appear later on. considerably to the work of the Departundergone very great extension. Yet in spite of the growth of the work no ad dition has been made to the English stuff, from becoming the focus of disease? hadly as it is needed. The accommodation at the Post Office is also undoubtedly too limited; when the building was erected it was sufficient for the requirements, but the comic opera "The Sorceror" at the Theatre designers had not sufficient prescience to foresee the immense development in the | trade of the port and the enormous increase that would pari passu take place in the Postal business. Whether the addition another storey to the existing structure would meet the case, or whether a new building 5 p.m. The following is the programme:will be required, we are not in a position to say, but it seems tolerably clear that among the public works needed in the not distant future a new Post Office or enlargement of the present one may safely be rank-

Beyond the provision of increased house ecommodation, however, there is the sti more important one of the practical re-organisation of the Hongkong Office. For some time past there has been a feeling of dissatisfaction with the Post Office, a feeling that Gardens, and there can be no question that the perty of Mr. H. Kirch, clerk at Messrs. They have struggled gallantly under difficulties for many years, and great credit is due to them for the excellent results-achieved under such manifold disadvantages. No one sees more clearly than Mr. LISTER that the service is inadequate to himself to himself in the most stately official he went down and examined the premises. He the requirements of the times and the necessities of the Colony, In his report be refers to this matter at considerable length and points out the directions in which he considers the local Post Office Chung Chan, Thinking that probably it should be developed. The gig at present maintained by the Post Office could, however, be dispensed with, which would go to reduce nee in Warm Climates. Dinnerond & Co., Chemists, the cost of the upkeep of the steam-launch. This is certainly required. The contract mails are now landed without any unreasonable delay, but nevertheless some time would be saved if the Post Office did its own work. The launch is, however, most required for the collection of letters from other sleamers, where there is often a notable less of time. With regard to the enforcement of the monopoly of the Post Office over outward correspondence, this is a question of revenue with bye:-which the Government are more immediately concerned than the public. Probably Mr LISTER, in his capacity of Colonial Tressurer, has his eye on the best way of meeting the cost of development of the Postal Service with the least pressure on the taxpayer. Naturally he would, as Postmaster, like to see his department paying its own expenses; equally, as Tressurer, he would prefer that the increased cost of the Postal Administration should not have to be provided for by the Colo nial Treasury, which has already somany drains on it. No systematic attempt has yet been 124 made to compel Chinese correspondence to be sent through the Post Office. There is a very efficient outside system of delivery of Chinese letters, and any interference with this system would probably cause some trouble and feelwithin their rights in enforcing their monopoly, and the Chinese would in the end submit as we believe they did at Singapore, but having so long permitted this invasion of the Orders for extra copies of the Daily Press should | wise in now enforcing it. " What for P" "In your mother's line, for instance?" "No. no. NO," Hetty replied with the greatest "It's a nity, because with such looks as yours there would be money in it—money—and would run you, my dear, on advantageous terms. If you've no Talent, we might take up a bit and look the part. I know all the machinery for spirit sapping and music and all. Think it over. "Oh!" cried Hetty. "Am I never to get out of the dreadful business? I see my father after eighteen years—and the first thing he does an impostor. No-no-no. I will not. "Well-well." The little man hastily took his thumbs out of his armholes and pushed back his chair a foot or two. "Your temper, my dear, reminds me of your mother, but she never had your looks-never. Well-if you won't, you won't. And talk of cheating! Why the whole world pretends. What's any show but pretence We dress up the giants to look taller than they are, and the dwarfs to look shorter. We put a little man by the side of the giant on the platform to show how big he is, and a big man by the side of the dwarf to show how little he is Its all pretence and sham, my dear, and th people like it." The Aged Philosopher of Beaumont-street could not have spoken more "Well if you won't-of coarse. Who are the people of this house?" "This house belongs to Mr. Cyrus Brudenel. "Cyrus Brudenel? Cyrus Brudenel? What. the great Spiritualist?"

"Cyrus Brudehel! I've heard of him, Hetty he dropped his voice—" is there an opening "Is there an opening? He's slways receiving American Spiritualists. Suppose I bring him one. Do you think you can make an opening " No-No-NO." She was so fierce that he pushed his chair s for back as it would go. "Well, don't fly in a man's face. I only asked." "Have you anything more to say to me? said his daughter. "Oh! to see your fathe after all these years." She sat down and burs into tears. "It's shameful. It's horrible, An to find that all he thinks about is to make mone by cheating. I don't want to see you again. am serry you came. You have made me sick and sorry. Oh! to think that while my motherpoor dear !- has to drag on her miserable spirit rapping, my father should want to drag me into of

she got up again and composed herself—" you Ope Her father picked up his hat and retired TRA without giving her the paternal blessing, and and without even a word of farewell. He looked very, Movery insignificant as he walked across the The footman allowed him to open the door without assistance. He left behind him, when he had disappeared, a most evil feeling of shame and disappointment. Hetty had found her father. Ho and he was a person without principles, without | NEN morality, without manners—a person to be sat beside her, and kissed her and comforted her. It is a truly blessed thing in moments of disconragement to have a lover to kiss and comfort "My dear." he said. "I have seen your father, I knew what he was like. i)o you forgive me for sending him here? It was I who caused it to be done. I thought that you would like to know what he is—and—has he been very terrible, dear

Presently Paul himself came down to her and

"It is not your fault. Paul that he iswhat he is. He wanted me oh! he actually wanted me to go away and join him in cheating. Oh, Paul, he asked me to pretend to spiritualistic powers-me-and I am engaged to you, to you, hours :- This Time Table will take effect from Paul's cheek flamed for a moment, and his lips twitched nervously. . .

I um stripped of everything and am only a common man again.' " I do not understand you, Paul." "Only a common man. We must forget all the past, Hetty-all-all-all-and begin again. am eager to begin again." (To be continued.)
